CALIBRATION DOCUMENT
BC 1.1 A Very Lucky Project

I feel that the audio is saying a lot about human inferences. It shows that there is a possibility of even the unthinkable can happen. Something unthinkable such as finding a balloon over one hundred-fifty miles away with the same name as yours.

I can truly say that I have not had something this unusually happen to me in my lifetime. However, at one time, while I lived in California, I met a girl named Tyler. Tyler and I conversed for however long, but being only eleven years old, we hadn’t had time to talk about each other’s lives or attempt to exchange information. We somehow remembered each other. I ended up running into the same girl eight years later at a party I was at in Pittsburgh and we somehow remembered the conversation we shared on Hermosa Beach. It really is a small world.

From the video I learned that there is a chance that almost anything can happen in the world. Just like Laura Buxton and Laura Buxton. They lived over a hundred and fifty miles apart and a balloon traveled with one of their names on it and it happened to land right next door to the other Laura Buxton’s house. This was also the case for Tyler and I. The chances of us finding each other eight years after meeting for only a little bit are slim to none, but it happened.