The best rule would have to be those with a BAC over 0.04 are drunk. Most people with a higher BAC than this usually actually are impaired and seem to do poorly on all of the test that are administered when they are pulled over. Some people with BAC below this could possibly just not be as coordinated as they would like. It’s not always the case that an individual may be drunk. So this rule would have to work the best with weeding out the ones that are or may not be drunk.